SYNOPSIS:

The Cactus Kid loves the ladies - which fact gets to be generally known wherever he is known. While chasing after a wild mare called The Queen his horse throws him, breaking his arm. While in pain from this accident he comes upon Jean Langdon having trouble with her flivver. She is the daughter of Col. Langdon, owner of the Triangle Ranch. Presently the Triangle cowboys, headed by the foreman, Lafe Baxter, come up. They have just caught the Queen. Lafe hopes and assumes to be the favored suitor of Jean Langdon. The girl does NOT favor him but dares not tell her father of his advances for fear the foreman will hurt her father. The flivver, with Jean & The Kid in it, is dragged back to the ranch where The Kid is nursed back to health and taken on as a hand. When they arrive at ranch they find Col. Langdon & Old Potts, neighboring owner of Bar-O Ranch, playing checkers. They switch to the subject of horse-racing and bet on a proposed race. Lafe calls his employer aside and tells of capturing the Queen. The Kid is made fun of by all, even Jean, who likes him, but despises him because she thinks he can't ride, is unmanly and a would-be "lady-killer". He, however, secretly tames the Queen when the others fail; but, not knowing about the race, lets her out to rejoin her mate. Afterward he whips Lafe for insulting Jean & Lafe is run off the ranch. Lafe finds out that the Queen is gone and goes to Old Potts, telling him the Triangle plan, and that the Queen is gone unknown to the Col. Old Potts goes over and bets his whole ranch against the Colonel's. Then it becomes known at The Triangle that the Queen is gone and The Kid owns that he let her go. He is ordered to get out and called a fool while the boys say he should be lynched. He goes to re-capture the Queen. The race is hurried on by the Sheriff to prevent fights over it. The Kid comes back with the Queen at the last moment and with her wins the race. Then Lafe is run off of both ranches. The Kid and Jean make up and the Col. & Old Potts play checkers for the ranch he just lost on racing. Checkers win it back.
